Reflections

High on the pine-crowned eastern mountain peak,
I stand atop the hill and seek
Life's meaning and Love's motive in the sky.

Even as craggy slopes, beneath my tread,
Seek their reflections in the river's bed.

Whereas, as the swiftly rushing waters glide,
Showing now blue, now golden in their raze.

The chill-cold or the sun-warmed billows brood
Over the torrents murmuring solitude.
So thru the shade or sunshine of my days,
I soon, or late, discern the guiding blaze.

Of trails that lead me straight from sun to sun.
So soon, indeed, are Pain and Sorrow done.

And Joy come tripping after them like a Spring.

Hard on the heels of Winter's lingering.

That we need never lose the flower-strewn ways.
If we fight fearlessly in the race we run!

--Edna Mead.
